

Figure 1.4: High resolution (20 meters per pixel) image of a double ridge approximately 2 km wide on the surface of Europa. Pre-existing terrain is preserved on the upwarped flanks of the ridge, lending support to the hypothesis that uplift, potentially from thermal buoyancy, drives ridge formation. (Image PIA00589.)